

The Meaning and Value of Life & Lifes Basis and Lifes Ideal

This volume features two of Euckens master pieces. THE MEANING AND VALUE OF LIFE &, LIFES BASIS AND LIFES IDEAL Euckens influence as a thinker reached far beyond the borders of his native land. In 1908 he was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature. It seems likely, wrote a reviewer in the London Guardian in 1910, that for the next decade Eucken will be the leading guide for the pilgrims of thought who walk on the idealist road. THE MEANING AND VALUE OF LIFE stands for an attempt to build a philosophy of life upon a basis sufficiently broad to meet ail the just demands of religion and of modern thought. There are scores of passages throughout the volume one would like to quote the thinking of a man of clearest vision and loftiest outlook on the fabric of life as men are fashioning it to-day. It is a volume for Churchmen and politicians of all shades and parties, for the student and for the man of business, for the work-shop as wella volume for every one who is seriously interested in the great business of life. Aberdeen Journal. In Lifes Basis and Lifes Ideal The Fundamentals of a New Philosophy of Life, Eucken discusses the leading principles of his philosophy and its application to the different spheres of life. By careful analysis of extant conceptions of life the author shows their inadequacy, the necessity for a new conception, and the direction in which this must be sought. The author feels that he has a message for the present time, and one that is vital to the true interests of all. His voice is that of a prophet in the sense of an ethical teacher, rather than that of a philosopher in the more technical sense. The aim of his philosophy is not to discuss the basis and ideal of thought, but to probe to the depth of life in all its complexity, and to advance to an all-inclusive ideal. The starting-point for us all is life as we experience itnot an apparent ultimate. The problem is a vital one; in one form or another, at one time or another, every one is faced with it: how shall I mould my life? And it is here that lies the importance of Professor Euckens contention that we have to make our decision for one system of life and thus for one philosophy of life as a whole, as taken against other systems and other philosophies.
