

Whipped Cream

Former model Brent Phillips now works the other side of the camera. He makes his money on senior portraits but wants to create an art exhibition. His only problems are lack of a central image and a three-week deadline. Enter Brent's friends, who resolve to discover the perfect model for his project. They find him in Tristan Greer, a college student who left home after coming out and is trying to make ends meet. Though initially reluctant, Tristan agrees to work with Brent to capture the image Brent wants: a gay version of Herb Alpert's Whipped Cream album photo. It turns out the camera loves Tristan, and the photographer may as well.
