

Sporting Legends - Cliff Morgan

Cliff Morgan is interviewed about his rugby career by the sports journalist, Ian Wooldridge. Morgan the Magnificent was the title given to Cliff Morgan by South African newspapers when he toured the country with the British Lions team in 1955. His success in that tour earned him the captaincy of Wales the following season. Cliff was born into a mining family in the Rhondda in 1930 and joined Cardiff Rugby Club straight from school, playing at fly-half. When his playing career ended in 1958 he joined the BBC, working as a TV commentator and producer. For the last ten years of his BBC career he was Head of Television Sport and Outside Broadcasts, with overall responsibility for the coverage of state occasions, as well as all major sporting events. After he retired from the staff of the BBC he became the presenter of the popular Radio 4 programme Sport on Four. Ian Wooldridge was widely recognised as the best sports writer of his generation. When he died in 2007 the many tributes spoke of his honesty, his fairness and his enthusiasm for sport. He particularly loved rugby, cricket and golf. Ian was born in 1932 and after an undistinguished school career he entered journalism, working on several local papers. In 1961 he joined the Daily Mail where he first made his name as a cricket correspondent. He stayed with the paper for the rest of his career as a sports writer and columnist, covering every major sporting event and winning numerous awards for his journalism. He wrote his final column the week before he died.

Cliff Morgan talks to sporting personalities of the past. In this recording he is in conversation with the first full-time manager of the England football team, Walter. Irish rugby legend Tony O'Reilly pays tribute to his former Lions teammate and friend, Cliff Morgan, who has died aged 83. - 3 min - Uploaded by Channel 4 News Cliff Morgan - who died today aged 83 - was most famous for his commentary on the greatest Listen to a sample or download Sporting Legends - Cliff Morgan (Unabridged) by Cliff Morgan in iTunes. Read a description of this audiobook, customer reviews. A tribute to the life and career of BBC broadcaster and Welsh rugby legend Cliff Morgan. Cliff Morgan, left, in A Question of Sport, 1970, with Lillian Board, David Vine, His other radio series included My Heroes and Down the River. Cliff Morgan talks to sporting personalities of the past. In this recording he is in conversation with the England Test cricket captain, Ted Dexter. Ted Dexters love Cliff Morgan and Mary Peters Sporting Legends 1. ?10.99 ?3.25. Cliff Morgan talks to sporting personalities from the past. Cliff Morgan is interviewed by Ian Listen to a sample or download Sporting Legends - Walter Winterbottom by Cliff Morgan in iTunes. Read a description of this audiobook, customer reviews and Download Audiobooks narrated by Cliff Morgan to your device. Audible Sporting Legends - Tom Finney cover art Sporting Legends - Cliff Morgan cover art. RUGBY union legend Cliff Morgan, a fine player and one of the most recognisable broadcasting voices, has died aged 83 after a long illness. Former BBC and ITV sports presenter Des Lynam has issued a glowing tribute to rugby legend Cliff Morgan, who has died at the age of 83. Clifford Isaac Cliff Morgan, CVO OBE (7 April 1930 29 August 2013) was a Welsh rugby In 1974 he became Head of BBC Radio Sport and Outside Broadcasts, and from 19 he was Head of BBC his Lions contemporary Tony O'Reilly and Welsh rugby legends Gareth Edwards, Barry John and JPR Williams. Former BBC and ITV sports presenter Des Lynam has issued a glowing tribute to rugby legend Cliff Morgan, who has died at the age of 83. Cliff Morgan: The images that captured a legend awarded a Lifetime Achievement Award at the 2007 BBC Wales Sport Personality Awards.