

A Second Chance at Love: A Hometown Hero Series Novel

Eight years after walking away from their engagement, the untouchable Madeline May Howard is back in the small coastal town of Whitegate, Maine. Her father is dying, but that isn't the only tragedy she has to face. Her ex-fiance is the local cop, and it's going to take all her strength to pretend she's over him. For beneath the cool exterior that Madeline exudes is a heart that's still broken by the circumstances that forced her to leave him. Harrison had never forgotten Madeline. Nor had he forgiven her. He'd loved her once, with all his heart, and she'd walked away from him without so much as a backwards glance. So when Madeline returns to Maine, Harrison is reminded of all the reasons he should steer clear of her. Only Madeline has always drawn him like flames draw moths, and that strange power she has over him begins to weave its sensual spell all over again. Their past is paved with resentment and pain, betrayal and mistrust. They'd be fools to think their future could be any different, wouldn't they?
